Taking care of the whole kitchen project and making sure every aspect of the job is well done is the speciality of Apollo Kitchens

Above: In this kitchen, Calcutta white marble benchtops have been teamed with gloss polyurethane cabinetry for a clean, contemporary look. The design is a collaboration between the owner, renovation architect and kitchen company Apollo Kitchens.

Having a new kitchen installed is a complex project requiring the skill of designers, craftspeople and subcontractors. However, with the help of an experienced kitchen company, the homeowner need not know about most of these relationships.

Apollo Kitchens has been in business for 40 years, designing, manufacturing and installing kitchens in new and renovated homes, working with architects and residential home builders, as well as commercial apartment developers.

Showrooms in Sydney and Newcastle, known as Instyle by Apollo Kitchens, are staffed by the company's kitchen design team, who often jointly collaborate with interior designers to create complete environments.

In the kitchen featured here, showroom director Joe Ardita worked closely with the owner and owner's architect to create a kitchen for a large, prestigious family home in Strathfield that was being renovated. Cabinetry in the contemporary galley kitchen is finished in a gloss polyurethane and teamed with a Calcutta white marble top. To keep a clean-lined look, appliances are integrated and there are no handles on doors and drawers. Apollo also designed and installed three entertainment units, a bar, children's desk, bookshelves and laundry cabinetry in the same finishes as the kitchen.

Apollo Kitchens works from its own state-of-the-art manufacturing facility and can take care of entire projects, from removing the old kitchen to employing and managing subcontracting trades.
